The Rise of Christianity

Christianity and the Empire
The first followers of Jesus taught his messages to Jews and non-Jews in the Mediterranean region. From there Christianity spread throughout the Roman Empire. This happened for many reasons. A network of roads made long-distance travel fairly safe and easy. The people who lived under Roman rule spoke Latin or Greek. This made it easier for Christians to share their ideas.

Another reason for the spread of Christianity was that it appealed to people. Christianity promised a better life after death. It gave people hope, something the Roman religion could never do. Christian communities also took care of the needs of their members.

Reasons for the Spread of Christianity
- The Roman road network made travel easy.
- The Romans kept the empire peaceful.
- Most people understood Greek or Latin, so communication was easy.
- Christianity offered more hope and security to people than did the official Roman religion.

The Romans tried to stop Christianity from spreading. Rome saw the new religion as a dangerous threat to its empire. Christians refused to worship the emperor as a god. Christians also refused to serve in the Roman army and were against war as a way to solve problems. For these and other reasons, Christians were arrested, beaten, and sometimes killed. Some Christians became martyrs, people who were willing to die rather than give up their beliefs.

In the early A.D. 300s, the emperor Diocletian made one last attempt to destroy Christianity. He failed because Christianity had grown very strong.

In A.D. 312 the new religion took a major turn. The night before an important battle, the Emperor Constantine had a dream. In the dream he saw a flaming cross in the sky.
The next day he had his soldiers paint the cross on their shields. After his army won the battle, Constantine believed the Christian God had helped him.

Constantine became a strong supporter of Christianity. He built churches in Jerusalem and Rome. He also let Christians serve in the military and work in the government. Constantine allowed Christians to stop paying taxes. In A.D. 313, he issued the Edict of Milan. This important order gave religious freedom to all religions in the empire, including Christianity.

After Constantine’s rule, the emperor Theodosius outlawed Greek and Roman religions. In A.D. 392, he made Christianity the official religion of the Roman Empire.

Organizing the Church
The early Christian church had to become better organized in order to unite its many followers. It also had to make sure that Christian communities shared similar beliefs and practices. Early church leaders used the Roman Empire as a model. Like the empire, the church was ruled by a hierarchy of officials. A hierarchy is an organization with different levels of authority.

Leaders of the church were known as the clergy. In the early church, only men were allowed to be members of the clergy. Regular church members were called the laity. In this hierarchy, archbishops had the most authority. Priests had the least. The five most powerful archbishops were each in charge of an entire city. These leaders were called patriarchs.

The bishops decided the true teachings of the Church. Accepted teachings became doctrine. Teachings that the bishops rejected were heresies. They went against the Christian faith.

Church leaders also preserved stories about Jesus and the writings of the apostles. By A.D. 300 there were four accepted accounts of the life and teachings of Jesus. Christians believed four apostles of Jesus wrote these accounts, or gospels. The word gospel means “good news.” The New Testament includes all four gospels and the writings of early Christians. The Old Testament is the Greek version of the Jewish sacred writings. The Christian Bible consists of the Old Testament and the New Testament.

Two of the most influential early Christian writers were Paul and Augustine. Paul’s writings are part of the New Testament. Augustine is one of the Church Fathers. These writers and thinkers played an important role in explaining and defending the teachings of Christianity.

As the Church grew, the bishop of Rome came to believe he had authority over all the other bishops. By A.D. 600, the bishop of Rome had the title of pope. Pope is from a Latin word that means “father.” Christians in the western part of the Roman Empire accepted the pope as the head of all the churches. These Christians spoke Latin. Their churches formed the Roman Catholic Church.

Christians in the eastern part of the empire spoke Greek. They did not believe the pope had authority over them. Their churches became the Eastern Orthodox Church.
